The screenshot displays the edna.edu.au website, which is described as "Australia's free online network for educators". The header includes the edna logo and navigation links for Home, News, Events, Resources, Groups, Lists, and me. A search bar is located in the top right corner, and a "Simple search link" is provided below it. The main content area is titled "Resources and networks for learning and teaching" and features three sections: News (with links to latest headlines, email newsletters, and e-learning podcasts), Events (with links to search education events, conferences, and the Australian schools calendar), and Resources (with links to browse topics, recently added items, and edna tech tools). A large image of a smiling woman at a laptop is featured in the center. The bottom of the page contains two promotional banners: "Comment on the Australian Curriculum" and "2010 Australian Schools Calendar out now!".

EdNA usage

Resource database (search and browse)

Abundance of information

Archaeological Research Data

(Per cent of users by last data type used)

Education has a problem with an abundance of information much of which becomes lost or inaccessible

- Information is more accessible
- More written information
- More published
- Increase in grey literature
- Information overload
